The word "saturation" has appeared repeatedly in the psychoanalytic work of Duane Rousselle and Mark Gerard Murphy. We shall explore further implications of this concept for religious and sociological thought.

How do the late teachings of Jacques Lacan help us to navigate contemporary capitalism, therapy or self-help culture, and mystical or apophatic theology? Join us live once weekly for a total of three weeks with lectures and discussions.

Bios:

Duane Rousselle, PhD, is a Canadian Sociological Theorist and Practicing Lacanian Psychoanalyst. He is a Visiting Associate Professor of Sociology at the University Colleges of Dublin and Cork.

Mark Gerard Murphy is an editor for the political journal and blog Taiwan Insight and a Lecturer at St. Mary's University, Scotland, Gillis Centre, where he convenes courses on ethics, philosophy, and mystical theology and spirituality. His research interests include the relationship between psychoanalysis and mystical theology. He has published in the Journal for Cultural and Religious Theory and the European Journal of Psychoanalysis.
